Future pathways to CFOs

How will the finance function fare in the face of significant disruptive future changes in our business and personal lives? Nearly 750 CFOs from across the world were surveyed by ACCA and IMA (June 2013) for the Future Pathways to Financial Leadership report.

The most popular stepping stone to the CFO role was from that of financial controller. Almost 50% had six or more finance roles within their career. While 40% of CFOs had taken a role outside the finance function in their careers, more may need to do so in future.

Plan A - Know your finance fundamentals
Future CFOs will still need a strong financial understanding. Ninety-five percent of current CFOs agreed it was important that future CFOs have experience in the core finance areas of financial and management accounting. Almost half of today’s CFOs have had six or more finance roles during their career; 80% have had a finance role in more than one organization; and almost three quarters have finance experience in more than one industry.

As the breadth of the role increases, it’s unrealistic to expect future CFOs to dive deep into every aspect of the finance organization, but critically they must be able to ask the right questions across the organization.

Strategy and business experience
In an environment where “commercials” will change quickly, extensive business experience will be highly valuable. While most of today’s CFOs (61%) do not have experience outside of the finance team, future CFOs should seek greater mobility in and out of the finance organization. Strategy formulation and execution was identified as the most important area in which future CFOs should have experience.

Management skills
The top four skills identified in our survey were leadership skills, communication skills, strategy skills and change management skills. Strong leadership skills will be essential, because the success of the future finance organization is very dependent on a strong united leadership with a shared vision and an engaged and skilled diverse finance team.

Risk experience under the belt
From traditional financial risks to emerging risks such as on-line reputational risk or cyber risk, the risks business face will grow, change, and in some cases, become more difficult to calibrate and manage. Risk experience is a must-have on the CV of future CFOs.

Customer focused
The future finance leader will need to “talk the same language” across a wide range of traditional finance and non-traditional finance relationships. The future CFO needs to be customer savvy; taking roles which provide greater customer understanding will be key.

Regulation and broader reporting
Alongside more regulation, we can expect on-going changes in reporting requirements – growing interest in the concept of integrated reporting, increasing use of financial and non-financial data, recalibrating investment assessments to account for environmental or social impacts and so on.

Get connected
The CFOs of tomorrow need to understand the significant role technology can play in driving better finance delivery. Possible use of robotic software in parts of the finance team to increase automation and better workflow, plug and play technology, and access to real time information provides finance chiefs with the ability to cut data many ways and offer an immediate, integrated view of business performance.

Expand your “footprint”
The future CFOs will need to be adept at working in the global business environment, leading finance teams which are diverse and virtual across mature and emerging markets. Time served in shared service operations may also be of benefit, both in terms of gaining core finance experience, and also understanding the center – retained relationship dynamics.
